Natural Pennant stone from the Royal Forest of Dean has been used as a traditional building material in many of the ancient cities within the South of England and Wales for hundreds of years.

We do not blast any of our stone. Instead blocks of blue and mixed colour Pennant stone are quarried in the traditional (and environmentally friendly) plug and feather method. All of our building and walling stone is dressed and cropped by hand.

The natural patterns and colours are unique to the stone quarried in the Forest of Dean.

Sawn & Dressed Building Stone – Pitched face

A natural British building stone that brings together the easy building characteristics of brick with the beauty of natural stone. Produced in module thicknesses of 65, 140 and 215mm, our sawn and dressed building stone gives the specifier and client confidence that on-site installation is both quick and cost effective.

Cropped Walling Stone Our shallow bedded block stone is drilled, split and cropped into a random rectangular building stone which is very popular with building contractors. When using this stone construction is usually undertaken with a backing block to provide traditional cavity construction. For ease of storage cropped walling stone is delivered in 1 tonne bags (approx 4 sq/m per bag).

Forest Pennant also produce bespoke architectural masonry including quoins, copings, corbels, steps, arches, window dressings and door surrounds.
